Organised by: Department of History, Raiganj University, Uttar Dinajpur, West Bengal, India, PIN-733134

Introduction:

With the evolving time, methodologies in Social Sciences have also evolved. The quest has urged researchers to delve into newer genres and with such traverse, newer historiographies have evolved. Studies in History have moved beyond the realm of Ancient, Medieval, Modern & Contemporary Histories. From Social History to New Social History, from Cultural to Intellectual History, Gender History, Environmental History, newer and newer genres have evolved.

The writing of History and any subject for that matter, within the corpus of Social Sciences, of whichever genre it might be, necessitates collection of source materials and an imaginative mind with a realistic and interpretive edge, honesty and authenticity. The basic is always the same. For any research work, especially, in History, determining the definite period and area of study are absolute primary factors. There are different methodologies in light of newer sources and sub-genres of History and Social Sciences that have come in vogue.
